

Gentlemen:

As a frequent business traveller (by automobile) I regularly use the services provided by XM Satellite Radio to determine the traffic congestion and get weather updates for cities that I am driving into. The availability of "Instant" updates on XM is invaluable to me because of the number of radio stations in a given city and the delay I receive when trying to find a station that generates weather or traffic information. With XM I know that the station is there and I won't be hassled with fumbling with the radio trying to find information.

It would be a great disservice to the people of this country to limit the amount, not to mention the quality, of the information provided by "Satellite" radio as well as "Regular" Over-the-Air broadcasts.

Thanks for your support in this issue:

Ken Relford (Atlanta GA)